Meeting Asked On Air Incident Navy Plane Is Sixth Shot Down By Soviet Over Europe, Asia

Security Council

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. The United States put its latest cold war brush with Russia before the United Nations today. The Navy plane was the sixth U.S. military aircraft shot down by the Soviets either in Europe or over the Pacific, but this was the first time the United States has brought such an incident before the Security Council. U.S. Delegate Henry Cabot Lodge Jr. asked for an "early meeting" of the Security Council to take up the shooting down of a U.S. Navy plane off Siberia Saturday by Soviet jet fighters.

Girl Matador Badly Injured By Bull

CIUDAD ACUNA, Mexico (A) -Patricia McCormick, 24, of Big Spring, Tex., remained in critical condition today in a hospital at Del Rio, Tex., across the Rio Grande, from the goring she received here Sunday.

She might have been killed in stantly but for Alejandro del Hierro of Juarez, an ex-matador who trained Pat to fight bulls. Del Hierro jumped into the ring, ran to the bull and pulled the girl from the horns after it charged and lifted her into the air. An understudy matador drew the bull's attention with a cape and killed it.

Del Hierro said here yesterday in halting English he did not think about not having a cape or of danger to himself when he rushed in. He said he "had no time for caution."

The School Problem

By 1960, little more than five years from now, it is expected there wil lb esome 8,000,000 more students in American schools than are currently attending. Somehow, provision must be made to house and teach this tremendous in-

The problem is not a distant one, as everyone knows who has been watching school trends. Ror instance, this very fall there will be 1,692,000 more elementary pupils, 219,000 more high school and 89,000 more college students.

Dr. Samuel Brownell, U. S. Commissioner of Education, says the country will have to triple its present rate of school construction to keep pace with the need. And yet the building of schools in the past two years has been at the highest rate in the country's history.

As for teachers, right now there is a minimum need for 118,000 elementary school instructors to taks care of mounting enrollment and to replace teachers leaving the field. Only about 45,000 qualified teacher graduates are apparently available, so the shortage will be 73,000.

As the great wave of new pupils moves up into high school and college years, the pressure for many more teachers will be felt more acutely in those brackets, too.

Congress addressed itself to this problem during the session just closed, and many lawmakers agitated far speedy action. But President Eisenhower and hiskey aides succeeded in blocking current enactment of aid-to-education legislation.

The President opposed action not because he believes the problem exaggerated but because he wants it studied more thoroughly. Consequently, he has now launched perhaps the most comprehensive inquiry into American schools ever undertaken. He is seeking the best cure he can find for a dilemma that has become painfully chronic.

Mr. Eisenhower wants all the governors to call state conferences of citizens and educators to appraise the situation. Then he wishes to call a White House conference to pull findings and recommendations together and shape a

The big question, of course, is how much of the load can be managed by the states and cities. The President is an advocate of state and local self-help wherever it is feasible. But many lawmakers and others believe federal assistance is essential. If that is so, then the next question which must be settled is how this aid can be managed without getting into federal dictation over education.

Certainly the answers to these questions cannot be long delayed. Nor can governmental economy be used as an excuse for doing nothing. At stake is the effective preparation of millions of young Americans for life in a difficult, troubled world. No one needs to say how important this is.

Balance Of Power

Two points of view have been crystallized by the shock of France's refusal to join the European Defense Community.

One is the point of view that there is no use chrying over spilt milk. It had been known for some time that France was not to accept EDC on proposed form and might turn it down altogether. There already has been too much time wasted over something that cannot be salvaged.

The urrent necessity now is to get on with some alternative plan that will be more realistic. That leads to the second point of view that has come ou tof the showdown over EDC.

Everything done in Europe with bearing on national security is part of the oldest game in the western hemisphere - "balance of power." Europeans have played it for centuries. They are utterly realistic about it - so much so that Americans are offended by European

There is no morality, as Americans think of it, in "balance of power." Security is the sole end, and the end justifies any means that may be used to reach it. The United States, itself, joined with the Soviet Union for the purpose of defeating Germany in World War II, just as it now is hoping to use Germans to defeat the Soviet Union in the event of World War III.

But Germans, too, know how to play the game. Events have given them fremendous bargaining power with both the United States and the Soviet Union. In less than 10 years after their unconditional surrender at the end of World War II they are once more the key nation in Europe's balance of power.

The closer you get to your friends the quicker you get next to them.

It was registered in May

The U.N. has registered 3,140 international agreements in its eight years of existence. It also has on file another couple of hundred annexes, protocols and modifications of the original treaties.

The accords have been coming in at the rate of six or seven a week since the U.N.'s inception. They cover every possible topic - commercial relations, mutual assistance, peace treaties, boundary agreements, air services, buying rubber, oil and other products, exchange of medical and scientific information, use of waters of rivers that pass through several countries, coinage of money, and a thousand other topics.

IN ITS 26 years of life, the League of Nations registered 4,834 treaties, which it published in 205

The U. N. already has published 99 volumes of treaties; 16 more are in various stages of printing, and another 200 volumes will be needed to accommodate all treaties to date.

Penalty for failing to register a treaty is that U.N. member nations are not required to recognize be brought before the U. N. if any of the parties breaches the pact.

This is a powerful incentive to governments, for even if the U.N. cannot settle the dispute, it offers the aggrieved nation a powerful sounding board to enlist world sympathy on its side.

About 1,500 copies of each volume of treaties is printed. They international law firms and universities. They sell for $3.75 and contain a maximum of about 20 accords. Some agreements, like the Italian Peace Treaty, take up an entire volume of several hundred

The series of treaty volumes is a central reference file of accords that is an invaluable asset to governments, diplomats, international lawyers and students. Before the system was set up, they had painstakingly to collect treaties when and if the documents were published by the various governments that signed them.

THE ORIGINAL copy of a treaty s kept in the achives of one of the nations that signed it - usually the host nation for the conference that wrote the agreement. The U.N. gets a certified copy signed by the secretary of state or the foreign minister and two additional copies for the use of translators.

The treaty copies themselves resemble any ordinary business document. These are signed by the diplomats that negotiate them. The "instrument of ratification" of the treaty - the legal notification of a country's adherence to the treaty that is signed by the chief of state or the king - is a glamorous work of art still done in the traditional diplomatic manner on heavy paper with seals, tape and stilted language. To help the group, staff working papers have been developed for staff guidance that trace the conflict and present the arguments for both sides.

Resume Of A Resume

Blending the majority, minority, Dirksen and Potter verdicts together in the Army-McCarthy case, we reach a new high for dizziness and come up with the following conclusions:

(1) McCarthy gets a slap on the wrist, with the sentence suspended;

(2) Secretary Stevens gets put on probation with instructions not to play with the "pros" or "semi pros" any more and watch his dinner

(3) Roy Cohn gets a chance to make a lving the easy way:

(4) John Adams gets sympathy as the fellow caught in between the two barrages and selected to take the rap;

(5) Dr. Peress gets his office painted inside and out, and the last laugh;

(6) General Lawton, retired for circulatory ailments developed after he criticized Harvard and joined the spy hunt with enthusiasm, wins a trip to razzle-dazzle land, a fine pair of goat horns and all the crow he can eat. The question, 'Who's on second base?" remains unsolved.

"Red" Barber, famous baseball broadcaster has been telecasting some of the figures behind baseball, and the other night he put on the Stevens Brothers, a pretty fantastic family which ran a few pounds of frankfurters and a sack of peanuts into a top sports world industry operating at 37 race tracks, ball parks and football fields.

To this department there was no gamer contestant on the baseball diamond that night than Frank Stevens, leader of the flock, and a fellow who drives doctors off their rocker and cheers up all folks who have ever had ticker-trouble.

He has been in the hospital close to death three times in the last three years with bad heart attacks, the doctors letting him out in each case with a firm warning to "slow up, take it easy and avoid unnecessary strain and excite-

He has plunged back into the grind nevertheless and in answer to Barber's, "What did you do today as showing the TV audience a typical day, Frank?" he replied, "went to the office all morning, went to the race track in the afternoon and am here at the crucial series tonight!"

He looked fitter than ever and we think the telecast called for a group of heart specialists shaking their heads as Frank brought them a racing tip, ahot-day, a highball and said, "The trouble with you guys is that YOU WORK TOO
